STRESS FACTS:

We all know what it feels like to be stressed. Stress is a word commonly used in our fast-paced society. No one can live without experiencing some degree of stress.

Short-term stress is not necessarily bad for you, as it is a vital part of life. However, daily demands placed upon us often accumulate to a point where it is almost impossible to cope.

Prolonged stress places an increased demand on many organs and weakens the heart, blood vessels, adrenal glands and immune system. The immune system is the body's first defense in maintaining health, preventing illness and hastening recovery. Research has shown that supplementing the immune system can help you to resist illness. Long-term stress also causes depletion of micronutrients and protective glucocorticoid hormones secreted by the adrenal glands. These hormones are essential in regulating your blood sugar levels. Together, these harmful processes increase your risk of developing lifestyle diseases such as high cholesterol, high blood pressure, heart disease, diabetes, obesity and chronic fatigue.

It is important to have the correct nutrients to repair and regenerate the adrenal glands, as many disorders related to stress are not a direct result of stress itself, but as a result of nutrient deficiencies caused by long periods of stress. People experiencing and reacting to stress need to maintain a nutritious, well balanced diet with special emphasis on replacing nutrients through supplementation to counteract the likelihood of deficiencies. Stress symptoms can vary from irritation and anxiety to fatigue and insomnia. Adrenal exhaustion is the progressive decreased function of adrenal glands and these glands need support in order to reduce stress symptoms.

How an individual copes with stress plays a major role in determining their level of health. A comprehensive approach to stress management is important in maintaining or attaining optimal health in today's demanding world.

LifeForce offers you a product that will play a vital role in assisting your immune system and helping you to cope with Stress.

VITAMINS

Vitamins are organic substances necessary for life. Vitamins are essential to the normal functioning of our bodies.

Vitamin B Complex:

Vitamin B1 aids in the metabolism of carbohydrates and assists the nerves and brain cells to remain healthy.

Vitamin B2 aids in maintaining a healthy skin and the release of energy from food. Aids in growth and reproduction, healthy skin, nails and hair. Helps to eliminate sore mouth, lips and tongue. Benefits vision and eye fatigue. Functions with other B vitamins to metabolise fat, proteins and carbohydrates, and thereby helps release energy from foods.

Vitamin B3 is necessary for healthy nervous systems and brain function. Essential for synthesis of sex hormones (Oestrogen, Progesterone, Testosterone), as well as Cortisone, Thyroxin and Insulin - in other words controls blood sugar, blood pressure, levels of energy and stress. A deficiency can bring about negative personality changes.

Calcium Pantothenate (B5) helps in cell building, maintaining normal growth and development of the central nervous system. Essential for conversion of fat and sugar to energy.

Vitamin B6 is excreted within eight hours of ingestion and like the other B vitamins needs to be replaced by whole foods or supplements. Requirements are increased when high-protein diets are consumed and during pregnancy or lactation. Must be present for the production of antibodies and red blood cells. Required for the proper absorption of vitamin B12. Needed to produce HCL in the body and helps with absorption of magnesium.

Folic Acid works together with B12 in the formation of red blood cells, the synthesis of nucleic acids and certain amino acids. It stimulates stomach acid secretions and improves digestion and appetite.

Biotin (Vitamin H) works synergistically with vitamins A, B2, B3 and B6 in maintaining a healthy skin. Aids in preventing hair from turning grey and promotes healthy hair growth. Can be used as a preventative treatment for baldness. Alleviates Eczema and Dermatitis.

It lowers cholesterol by converting it into bile acids and is, in turn, helped to perform its duties by Zinc. Vitamin C also assists in the absorption of certain amino acids and is required in greater amounts by dieters following high protein diets and those suffering from Hypoglycaemia. It helps to neutralize nitrosamines - carcinogenic substances that are formed when smoked meats such as ham and bacon are cured with nitrites. Plays a leading role in the body's resistance to bacterial infections and reduces the effects of allergens in the body. Vitamin C possesses unique antioxidant properties, which assist in combating the negative effects of environmental and chemical pollutants.

Helps the body utilise and assimilate Vitamin A, Calcium and Phosphorus more efficiently. Maintains a healthy nervous system, normal heartbeat and efficient blood clotting. Vitamin D is absorbed together with emulsified fats, through the intestinal wall. When produced by the sun it is absorbed directly into the bloodstream. After absorption, it is stored in the liver. It is also stored in smaller quantities in the skin, brain, and bones. People who do not drink milk, or who are strict Vegetarians, should be concerned about their Vitamin D intake.
